

Name: _____

Class: _____ Date: _____

Let's Use Relative Pronouns!

An extension of "Remembering the killings at Tiananmen Square"

There are many ways to join sentences together. One way is to use relative pronouns. These are words that introduce a clause to tell us more about a person, place, object, or time. Some relative pronouns are where, who, that, and which. Below are five pairs of sentences taken from the article, "Remembering the killings at Tiananmen Square" (page 7, What's Up, May 2019). Combine each pair into one sentence using the relative pronoun given.

1. Tiananmen Square is located in Beijing, the capital of China. In China, people are not allowed to discuss Tiananmen.

_____ where _____
_____.

2. Hu Yaobang was a Communist Party leader. He believed that the government needed to change the way it ran China.

_____ who _____
_____.

3. A short video was censored on Chinese social media platforms. It follows a Western journalist covering the events of 1989.

_____ that _____
_____.

4. Soldiers arrived, armed with tear gas. They used the tear gas on protestors.

_____ which _____
_____.

5. The journalist took a photograph of a single protestor standing in front of the tanks. That iconic photograph has since become a powerful symbol of resistance to all oppressive regimes.

The photograph of _____,
which _____,
_____.