Pamphlets for Polio Vaccination

An activity of "Polio vaccination is saving children in Guinea".

The recent polio vaccination drive in Guinea was a huge success, with 3.2 million children vaccinated in just four days. Read how this was done in "Polio vaccination is saving children in Guinea" (pages 20-21, What's Up February 2025).

A. Based on the story, tick (✓) the actions that were carried out in Guinea to make the polio vaccination drive a success.

Actions	Tick
1. Health workers went house to house to convince people to allow their children to be vaccinated.
2. Vouchers were given to families whose children were vaccinated.
3. The cost of the Polio vaccine was heavily discounted.
4. Ambassadors went around to inform the people of the benefits of the vaccine and to correct false information about it.
5. Children who were vaccinated had their fingers marked for tracking purposes, so as to ensure that no child was missed out.
6. Vaccinators brought along vaccines to remote rural villages to administer the vaccine to the children there.
7. Posters, flyers and other awareness-raising activities helped to inform parents of the importance of vaccinating their children.
8. Health workers, communities, the government, UNICEF, and other partners worked together in this vaccination drive.
9. Social mobilisers went to public places to spread information about the vaccination campaign and to encourage people to get involved.
10. Celebrities were roped in to give the vaccination campaigns a publicity boost.

B. In groups, create a simple one-page pamphlet that provides information about polio so that parents would be convinced to vaccinate their children against it. Fill in the table using facts from the What's Up story and the internet. Then, design an attractive pamphlet presenting the information.
